DESIGNING A POST-COVID WORKPLACE FIT FOR HUMANS

How to ensure your workplace strategy takes into account basic human instincts

Interactive Webinar with Andrew O’Keeffe author of Hardwired Humans and The Boss

Wednesday 16 September, 2020
7:00 – 8:30pm Sydney time world clock

Many of us are beginning to consider what a post-pandemic workplace will look like. Has COVID-19 triggered fundamental shifts in where and how people will work? Will the future be totally remote working that some people predict? Or will office work be much as we knew it before the pandemic?

This is where a framework of human nature helps - we can reliably predict how people will behave based on our natures. The framework makes an uncertain future clearer and is a sound foundation for making workplace decisions.

How will this webinar help your thinking?

- Are you making decisions on a one-year horizon or five-to-ten year outlook?
- What are the six factors that leaders should take into account in deciding their future work strategy?
- What are the potential long-term impacts of a primarily remote workforce?
- Are you taking into account how people naturally behave?
- Explore and make meaning of your own situation by discussing with peers.

This webinar will help you develop a realistic workplace strategy – to create a workplace that's fit for humans.

Who Should Attend?

Leaders and HR professionals – anyone responsible for future workplace strategy.
